

This is being sent in response to the above FCC proposal. It is the belief of myself and my family that the FCC strongly reconsider its proposal. With the current Telephone Privacy Law in Indiana, my family and I can rest assured that we can finish our dinner without interruption. We no longer cringe at the sound of the phone ringing. Since enacting this law, telemarketer calls are now almost non-existent (with the exception of the one or two a month that are allowed by current law) in our household. Before this law we were receiving approximately three or four a day, usually around dinner time with some occurring early on a Saturday or Sunday! The Indiana Telephone Privacy Law should be a model for any entity or group looking to stop these calls. It is my feeling that this is something that should be left to the states themselves to enact without Federal intervention, however, if you feel you must, I urge you to look closely at Indiana's law and create a proposal that is equal to or exceeds that of Indiana's current state law. Thank you.
